"Cedarine,"

the Ideal Moth Preventive.

Cedar has been used in one form or another for hundreds of years as a moth preventive. Cedarine is nothing more or less than the heart of southern red, sweet-smelling cedar, chemically prepared in chip shaving form, and impregnated with pure gum camphor, to enhance its efficacy as a protection against moths. If used according to the simple directions with each package, Cedarine is an absolute preservative of clothing and all woolen goods from moths.

For a long time we have considered adding a Butter Department to our Pure Food Store. When the matter was gone into in detail, however, it became early evident that Butter of the sort we would be willing to offer was not to be obtained in the open market; the ordinary sort was in ample evidence, but the unusual quality demanded by us could not easily be found. We made an exhaustive canvass; sought and obtained expert judgment from a disinterested source, and finally, after much inquiry, located a Creamery whose output is renowned for its excellence. We then endeavored to effect immediate arrangements for a supply, but the butter market was in a most peculiar condition, and this creamery, whose efforts have always been toward quality rather than quantity, was burdened with orders. It was not at all desirous to take a new account. But we were not to be denied, and after our identity became established we were fortunate enough to conclude satisfactory arrangements for a continued supply of "Colonial" grade Butter—"better than which there is none."

The container we have adopted for distribution assures the Butter reaching our patrons in an absolutely hygienic and satisfactory condition.
